

When it comes to another Gen-Ed course requirement assignment I did, that would be a reflection paper for my GEN-1000-3 FYI: Great Lives course that was done at the end of the semester by looking back on everything done in the course and reflecting on it.

For how I did this assignment, that would be that I first gave an introductory paragraph of all the different assignments and activities that I did throughout the course with then going into detail in the following paragraphs after that of what all of those assignments and activities specifically were with which ones I liked the most and were also the most meaningful to me as well and why with also saying how I approached some of the assignments and what I got out of them as a whole. With that, I then went on to talk about and describe that of my overall learning experience, what specific things worked well for me in the course, what I was proud of accomplishing in the course, and my overall thoughts and experience in the course with saying how I plan to use some of the things I learned in the course for that of the rest of my time at college as well as after college too with also saying that I am looking forward to the rest of my time at college with deciding what I want to study and major in.

All in all, when it comes to what I learned from this assignment, that would be how to look and reflect back on a course in writing about it that I took throughout a semester.
